Practice-based research on mathematics teaching
Traditionally, research on teaching has targeted either behaviors or characteristics of teachers. However, practice-based research on mathematics teaching has a different focus. Instead of observing what teachers do, practice-based approaches tend to investigate the work that is to be done and the problems that are entailed in the teaching of mathematics. One important way to improve the impact of educational research on practice is that research pay closer attention to instructional problems teachers want to solve. In the planned special issue, the aim is to discuss state-of-the-art practice-based studies of mathematics teaching that attempt to do this.

Practice-based research on teaching involves a diversity of approaches. In the Nordic countries, for example, lesson studies and learning studies have been used as a way to generate knowledge about the relation between teachers’ instruction and students’ learning, and action research is widely used to investigate and theorize teachers’ questions derived from their own classroom practice.

The intention of this thematic issue is to bring together the Nordic field of practice-based research on mathematics teaching. We will therefore invite contributions from all Nordic and Baltic countries, covering a broad spectrum of mathematical content from preschool to secondary school.
